Notes
- Innings played by the Minnesota Twins in the 1979 season.
- Anchor Players are listed with their corresponding positions for each game.

Additional Notes
- The Minnesota Twins had a strong defense throughout the season, with multiple players filling in for key positions.
- Key players such as Craig Kusick, Bob Randall, and John Castino were frequently used in defensive situations.
- The Twins' defense was well-represented in games against opponents like Chicago Cubs, Detroit Tigers, and Toronto Blue Jays.

Additional Information
- The Twins finished the season with a record of 96-66, securing third place in the American League East.
- The defense played a crucial role in the Twins' success, particularly in close games and high-stakes situations.\n

Notes:
- The table above lists the lead players for each game, along with the date, game number, opponent, inning number, and the lead player's name and position.
- The lead player is the one who directly leads the defensive replacement, allowing the manager to make the replacement without falling behind in the count.

Additional Information:
- The table includes dates and game numbers, which could be used to track the progress of the season and the changes in the team's defensive strategies.
- The table also provides context about the specific games, such as whether it was a home or away game, and the opposing team.

Conclusion:
- The 1979 Houston Defensive Replacement Details provide valuable insights into the defensive strategies employed by the Houston Astros during the 1979 season.
- These details can be used to understand the team's performance and the effectiveness of their defensive replacements.

Further Reading:
- For more information on defensive replacements in baseball, refer to Ron Bernier's 1979 Replay Guide and his 1979 Houston Defensive Replacement Details.
